

Dear Future Students of Nick,

One of the first things Nick said was he won't 'teach'. He will guide you instead. He will take you on a journey during this camp. Nick's class will be very confusing and difficult. It is the hard truth. I'm sure y'all are very bright people, but you won't understand everything. It's okay not to understand, the class is designed to push you to your limits. It will be hard and treacherous, whether it be solving  $Ax = b$  or finding the definition of knowledge. Although strenuous, this will be one of your greatest experiences. You will learn many new, interesting things. It will not always be related to linear algebra and will make you contemplate many things. However, it will definitely be filled with incredible people, from your classmates to the amazing TAs and Nick. Don't stress too much and just enjoy.

Sincerely,
Audrey Jiang

P.S. The yoga, meditations, and walks that you 'feel' might be weird but they really help
